The impact of structural racism and discrimination on chronic pain in Black or African American older adults: Biopsychosocial mechanisms

In this multi-site research study, we are pursuing a highly innovative line of investigation that exploits neuroimaging and machine learning approaches to investigate the neurobiological mechanisms underlying psychosocial influences on pain, with a particular interest in explicating ethnic differences in pain.

Neural mechanisms underlying psychosocial contributions to ethnic group differences in pain

The overall goal of the career development award is to determine the neural mechanisms by which pain catastrophizing influences the pain processing and the experience of pain among African Americans and non-Hispanic whites and to assess the feasibility of delivering a targeted pain catastrophizing intervention in racial/ethnic minority adults with chronic knee osteoarthritis.
